Mr. Bradford.

SIR,

FROM the respect which, without conscious vanity I owe to myself, it is with great reluctance indeed, I condescend at all to animadvert on a short notification inserted in your Gazette of the 10th instant, signed by a Simeon Spring;—purporting his supercession of me, as the late attorney in fact of Messrs. Snipes and Huger, and intimating a revocation of all the SALES OF LAND supposed to have been made by me, within the South Carolina Yazou Company's purchase. But as from Mr. Simeon Spring's common place mode of shaping his sentences, a pointed inference may be deduced, that I had sold some lands for those gentlemen, or for others concerned in that purchase, for which I had not accounted,—and as the aforesaid Mr. Spring, antecedent to this, suffered himself to commit other intemperate acts, which may signally damage this company I yet represent, and misguide the public opinion: in answer to that paragraph of constructive slander I have but just to assure the public, (as to Mr. Spring, he must be at heart, convinced of it,) that I never sold one foot of land for those gentlemen, nor even for myself, nor for any concerned in the purchase, nor had any power from them to do so;—and as to the other antecedent intemperate acts of Mr. Spring, (for I wish to stamp every act of his with the fittest epithet,) by which the company may be signally damaged;—these acts are such, and the nature of his double attorneyship such, with respect to the company I allude to, as (in order to understand the writing and demerits of the business) will require a lengthy detail; for the proximity of which, Mr. Bradford, I humbly solicit your and the public's impartial indulgence.

Early in the year Eighty-five, (when each state in the confederacy had enjoyed a clear, constitutional right of extinguishing, within their own chartered jurisdictions, all Indian claims of soil, by treaty,) a legislative act was passed by the General Assembly of the state of Georgia, by which a certain district on the Mississippi, adjacent to the Yazou River, and comprising the Walnut-Hill Lands, had been raised into a county, called the County of Bourbon; and the same act likewise imported this legal privilege: that "any citizen or citizens of the United States, who would have satisfied the proprietary tribes of the Country (the Chadaaws) in whom the right of soil had been invested, for that right, or fairly obtained their full sanction to settle therein, and to colonize the same;—then and in such case, he or they should be entitled, in virtue of such act to obtain a State Patent for the said lands," at a moderate price, therein stipulated and mentioned.

In November Eighty-six, and under coverture of this act, a certain Capt. John Woods, who was exceedingly in favor with that host of Indians, of them obtained, in full council of the nation, for himself, his heirs and affairs forever, a deed of Grant for the territory, or tract aforesaid; a deed duly executed, and afterwards recognized by the State of Georgia.

Towards the close of Eighty-eight, or the commencement of Eighty-nine, the said Capt Woods came to Charleston, South Carolina, and there sold a full moiety of his right to Major Thomas Washington, then of that city,—and on the said Woods's return to Kentucky, disposed of the residue to Capt. John Cape of that district. Soon after this, Washington extinguished Cape's right by purchase, and thus became sole proprietor of the Indian claim.

Things having progressed to this advanced condition, and Major Washington purporting, as speedily as may be, to avail himself of the right administered to him by that Bourbon county Act and his Indian deed, of obtaining a Patent from the State of Georgia, he deemed it advisable to consolidate his interest; and in this view, called forward to his aid Major William Clay Snipes, Gen Isaac Huger, and Col. Alexander Moultrie, (the present director of the company, and Attorney General of the State of South Carolina) as his first partners or associates in the business. Thus were formed the primary rudiments of the company.

In Eighty-nine, (and antecedent to any solicitation for the State's Patent,) it was resolved on by these four gentlemen, to take possession of the soil, under sanction of the Indian Grant, and to have a quantity of goods conveyed there by the first opportunity, for the purpose of conciliating the Indians still more, and to facilitate the progress of the settlement. Col. John Holder was then in Charleston, and deemed a fit instrument for the enterprise. He engaged to have the goods transported to the Walnut Hills,—to take with him a number of settlers, and of himself to super-add a quantity of Indian goods to those then to be given him. Of these four gentlemen he obtained goods amounting to almost two thousand pounds sterling—and departed on his mission.

The House of McCleod and Co. merchants of the city of Charleston, had supplied those goods, on Bonds jointly signed by the aforesaid four associates,—by Majors Washington and Snipes as principal principals,—and by Col. Moultrie and Gen. Huger, as sureties; but the whole four were principals in fact—all being equally concerned,—and all being equally responsible on the obligatory Instrument. I was on the spot, when this association had been entered into,—and although Col. Holder had been entrusted with the goods by Messrs. Washington and Snipes, as the principal proprietors; yet, Messrs. Moultrie and Huger were equally interested in them: And on my appointment to the General Agency, (after the State of Georgia had sold them the lands, after the company had been duly organized, and an accession of sixteen members super-added to the original four ones, these four gentlemen had then relinquished their several rights in the goods, to the company in common—and the company in common assumed, and equally divided those rights)—is my commission, and the director's instructions to, and correspondence with me will prove unequivocally.

Soon after the transmission of these goods, by Col. Holder, and in the December of the same year (1789,) the Legislature of Georgia was convened—before which body the statuted and diplomatic claims of Messrs. Washington, Snipes, Moultrie, and Huger, for a State Patent, was to have been agitated and determined on; To render the purchase money less onerous to these four, and the better to secure their interests for obtaining that Patent—they then took in, and afterwards legally admitted sixteen other gentlemen, remarkable, as was thought, for their opulence, influence, or intellectual abilities;—so that the whole Board, or Company of principal proprietors then consisted of twenty Members—nor was it to exceed this number; and these actually form what is now called, under a Law of the Georgia State, the South Carolina Yazou Company. Into this body I have had the honor of being admitted a Member, and had accordingly enrolled my name, as such, on the Books of that Association. Whereupon, (having first paid for my dividend of the Grant) the Directors' Warrant, actually in my possession, had been acceded to me for the same;—by which it is declared: "That my proportion of the Company's territory is free of incumbrance." From the distorted arrangement of terms, in Mr. Spring's little Advertisement, it would appear; that it excluded me the right of disposing, even of my own part of the purchase. Considering that this gentleman has been the first, who had hazarded his literary fame, and his reputation too, with the public, as a writer against me,—considering likewise, that, by his, or his necessary assistant's dictation, his purpose was, or at least seemed to be,—to have aimed at Laconic conciseness and Didactic elegance;—considering moreover; that as he had experienced I could gift, he might well know I could sell my own lands; he surely ought to attempt his style;—and to commit his language to the Press, with more guardedness and precision. The fact is, that never in my life have I yet sold a Rod of land, for myself, or for any other person.

Towards the close of this session, the Legislative act of sale, to Messrs. Moultrie, Huger, Snipes, Washington, and Company" was passed, almost unanimously, by both Houses, when the gentlemen expressly mentioned, as above,—together with their company in the gross, were recognized by Law, and their Indian Grant solemnly acknowledged, authenticated, and ratified, under authority of the antecedent Bourbon County Act, which had statutedly sanctioned and originated it.

On the basis of those Laws, the Twenty Proprietors in chief soon afterwards convened, entered into solemn articles of association, formed and arranged Company-Books, digested regulations and rules, and chose Col. Alexander Moultrie their Director. On account of the detached situation of the Proprietors, as residents of different States—and the great difficulty of readily convening them in the first stages of their business—and as Messrs. Moultrie, Huger, Smithe and Washington (the four original proprietors,) had resided together in Charleston;—it was then agreed upon among the members: that these four should be invested with powers, competent to the business of commencing on measures for conducting the first settlement, and every requisite incident to that arduous undertaking. They were, therefore, empowered to choose the residuary officers,—such as General Agent, Sub Agent, Treasurer, and Secretary. The General Agent was to possess authority in and throughout the whole of the Western Territory,—and to form and superintend the first rudiments of the settlement, with powers to appoint deputies.—He was to be regularly commissioned by these four, as from the company at large;—nor was his authority to cease, until formally revoked by the whole board of proprietors. He was to be amenable, only to the instructions of that Board or of their Director for the time being. No Member, or Members in their individual capacity were to have any controul over him, or over the affairs of the Company intrusted to his official care. He was to obey them collectively but not individually.

An English paper of the 24th of October mentions that “one of the first acts of Col. Simcoe’s administration in Canada will be, to deliver up the British posts situated on the east of the river St. Lawrence, and to the south of Nova Scotia, according to certain articles in the treaty of peace with America.”

The public are cautioned against receiving Fifty Dollar Bills of the bank of North America, without a strict examination, as some bills of five dollars have been altered to fifty; the original sum appearing to have been extracted by a liquid, and fifty dollars put in the place with a pen. The imposition may be easily discovered from the back of the bill, the altered place appearing of a yellow cast.
